

The 30MPC Outbound Sequence Template

Use this outbound sequence template to book more meetings

Table Of Contents

- What makes a great outbound sequence?
- Sequence Structure Overview
- Email Templates: The 1st Big Problem
- Email Templates: The 2nd Big Problem
- Email Templates: Get The Truth
- LinkedIn Templates

Disclaimers

- Covey will be our example company. I do outbound consulting for them. Their value proposition is simple: they use AI to automate inbound resume screening and outbound candidate sourcing for recruiters.
- This isn't a guide on how to write cold emails. You will see example emails, but the main focus is sequence structure. For cold email 101, read How to Write A Good Sales Email or How to Personalize Cold Emails at Scale.
- Adapt, don't copy-paste. If you're reaching out to a decision maker on an enterprise account, add more personalization, LinkedIn touches, and cold calls. If you're doing mass scale SMB outreach, do less.

Ready? Let's land some meetings.

Get the ultimate step-by-step program to master the phones

30 MINUTES TO
PRESIDENT'S CLUB

30MPC Sequence Structure Overview

Here's how all of the prospecting touches in an outbound sequence work together

Theme	Step	Day	Task
1st Big Problem (Personalized 1st Email + Subject Line)	1	1	 Email: Biggest Problem
	2	1	 LinkedIn: Connection Request
	3	3	 Cold Call: Leave 1st VM
	4	3	 Email: Bubble-up
	5	3	 LinkedIn: Message (Context Only)
	6	7	 Cold Call: Leave 2nd VM
	7	7	 Email: Make it real
	8	7	 LinkedIn: Message (Bubble Up)
2nd Big Problem (New Subject Line + Phase Out LinkedIn)	9	11	 Cold Call: No VM
	10	11	 Email: 2nd Biggest Problem
	11	15	 Cold Call: No VM
	12	15	 Email: Right Person?
Get The Truth (New Subject Line + Phase Out Calls)	13	19	 Email: Pushaway (not interested?)
	14	23	 Email: Pushaway (reach back out?)
Sequence Mix: 7 emails, 4 calls, 3 LinkedIn

There are 5 core principles that make this a great sequence:

1. 10-14 touches over 30 days: It takes time to break into a good account. Thoughtful outreach over a month lets you surface multiple problems, demonstrate persistence, and take multiple shots at connecting over email/phone/linkedin in case you don't catch 'em the first time.
2. Use multi-channel to stuff in more touches and double your email replies: Sending 14 emails on 1 channel is obnoxious. But spreading those across channels "buys you" more touchpoints and doubles your email reply rate by drawing attention back to your emails (Gong data referenced in our book).
3. Sell one thing at a time: Don't sell everything in one email. That leads to long emails that get deleted. Start with the biggest problem to draw out the first batch of replies. Then move to the next . Then if neither worked, just try to get a response.
4. Change themes and subject lines to grab attention: Bubble-up emails should always reply to the previous email in the thread. But every time you change themes, change the subject line to catch their attention again.
5. Abide by the law of diminishing returns: I phase out LinkedIn by the 2nd theme and cold calling by the 3rd theme to redirect those efforts on fresh prospects who are more likely to pick up.

Let's dive into that first bucket of emails.

Get the ultimate step-by-step program to master the phones

Email Templates: The 1st Big Problem

Your best, most personalized email with 2 bubble-ups to resurface it

Email 1: Personalized Problem Email || Subject Line: Whitney's ENT AE search

Hey Whitney,

I saw that your team has 27 job postings including that new enterprise AE role – with more candidates than ever before, the hard part isn't getting people to apply. It's figuring out which of the 1000 applicants is actually worth a phone screen.

Covey Scout takes your ideal candidate profile and screens thousands of profiles to uncover the top 5% applicants within an hour – helping companies like Doordash focus on evaluating the best candidates, not screening resumes.

Open to seeing what this would look like for {{companyName}}?

Personalization + 1st Problem (inbound sourcing)

1st Solution (always stays the same)

Interest-based CTA

Email 2: Bubble Up || Subject Line: Reply to previous email

Hey Whitney, just tried you over the phone. Any thoughts?

Allude to multichannel

Point to the 1st email

Email 3: Make it real || Subject Line: Reply to previous email

Left you a VM. Here's a 1-minute video where we screen 1000 resumes in a click.

Open to trying it out on one of your job postings?

Make it real.

Sell the test drive.

Your first email is your best, personalized email. It follows the 3x3 email structure of personalization attached to a problem → one-sentence-solution → interest-based CTA.

So use bubble-ups to give that strong opening email 2 more chances to be seen. Avoid over-selling in the bubble-ups. Make it clear that you're calling them, then point back to the 1st email with a simple "any thoughts?" and you'll be shocked when the bubble up gets just as many replies as the first one.

The last bubble up makes it real for the folks on the edge of replying. Instead of just asking "any thoughts" again (aka, being annoying), make it real with a case study or demo video for the folks who are right there, but just need something a bit more tangible. Again, keep it short. The resource augments the 1st email.

Get the ultimate step-by-step program to master the phones

30 MINUTES TO

PRESIDENT'S CLUB

Email Templates: The 2nd Big Problem

If that 1st problem didn't land, try your next biggest problem

Email 4: Your Next Best Problem || Subject Line: Enterprise AE sourcing

Hey Whitney,

Sometimes that Enterprise AE won't come to you because you know the best reps often aren't looking – but it takes an army of sourcers to crawl LinkedIn and send cold emails to find your next President's Club rep.

Your sourcers could 4x their output with Covey's Outbound AI Sourcer, which surfaces ideal candidates and pre-drafts the initial outreach without losing the human nuance.

Open to trying it out for one of your roles?

Reuse the personalization for the 2nd problem (outbound sourcing)

One-sentence solution

Interest-based CTA

Email 5: First Pushaway || Subject Line: Reply to previous email

Hey Whitney – I'd hate to bother you if this doesn't all on your plate.

Is there someone else on the team you think I should reach out to?

Pushaway

Wrong person?

Change the subject line and switch to the 2nd problem. Most sequence tools allow you to personalize future emails upfront, so reuse the personalization trigger in the first email and attach it to your 2nd problem if possible.

If this email doesn't work, draw out some replies by asking if they're the right person. If they are, they'll often reply (and also include whether or not they were interested in your last messages). If they aren't, you'll save time and be able to move onto others.

Some folks recommend bubbling up the 2nd problem email twice like you did with the 1st, but I find that prospects will notice the pattern and often get annoyed (and unsubscribe at this point). My goal is to minimize unsubscribes and instead ask for help – I'm giving them an "out" of the cold emails if they're not the right person.

Get the ultimate step-by-step program to master the phones

30 MINUTES TO

PRESIDENT'S CLUB

Email Templates: Get The Truth

At this point, we're just trying to get an answer

Email 6: Pushaway (Not Interested?) || Subject Line: Reach back out?

Hey Whitney – I shared a few ways that we'd help with your team's candidate sourcing, but I'd hate to keep reaching out if we weren't a fit.

Mind giving me the thumbs-up or thumbs-down?

Cite the previous emails

Interest-based CTA

Email 7: First Pushaway (Reach Back Out?) || Subject Line: Reply to previous email

Hey Whitney, I'll assume this isn't a fit for now. In case you'd ever like to consider us, I'm including a few resources below:

- One Sentence Summary: We remove the grunt work of sourcing candidates by screening thousands of inbound resumes and millions of outbound candidates without losing the human-level nuance.
- One Minute Demo Video: Covey screening 1000 candidates in 60 seconds.
- Case Study: How we helped Doordash source 10x the candidates.

I usually reconnect with folks every 30 days or so to see if anything has changed.

Mind letting me know if I shouldn't reach back out?

Acknowledge the breakup

Leave brief resources behind

Tell them you're coming back in 30 days to draw out the last replies

Break-up emails are controversial, but they work. Why? Because there are often people who are on the fringe of replying, but they keep saying "I'll handle this at some other point." The break-up email creates a sense of loss aversion by letting them know that this will be their last reminder.

My approach to a break-up is to give them a reason to tell me they're not interested. In other words, I'm telling them "if you don't want me to email you anymore... just say it!" The 1st email in this theme simply asks for a yes or no, the 2nd email draws extra replies by letting them know that you'll be reaching back out in 30 days (so if they don't want to hear from us again, just let us know).

Avoid unprofessional breakup emails. There are obnoxious cheeky emails like the 1-2-3 email that says "are you [1] interested [2] not interested or [3] stuck under a rock!?" – these not only get you the wrong types of replies, they tend to lower your professional status. If there's an email from an angry prospect that got forwarded to me as a VP of Sales, it usually looked like this.

Get the ultimate step-by-step program to master the phones

30 MINUTES TO

PRESIDENT'S CLUB

LinkedIn Templates

Use LinkedIn to increase your email replies

LinkedIn Connection Request
blank	No message

LinkedIn Message 1: Context Only
Hey Whitney – noticed your Enterprise AE job posting and sent you an email the other day about it.	Point back to email
I know everyone hates the whole connect-and-pitch thing, so I won't restate it all here.	Explicitly don't sell on LI
Did you see my note by chance?	Point back to email

LinkedIn Message 2: Bubble-Up
Any thoughts?	Use the same video

(OPTIONAL) LinkedIn Message 3: Video
Hey Whitney, I recorded a 60-second video to give you a sense of what it looks like.	Use the same video
Mind giving me the thumbs-up or thumbs-down?

The purpose of LinkedIn prospecting is to drive up your email replies. You can put a face to your name and draw attention back to the email. Some people book meetings on LinkedIn, but in my experience coaching 100+ SDRs (and prospecting myself), I rarely see prospects agree to a meeting inside the LinkedIn DM itself.

Therefore, your LinkedIn touches should “tie” to your emails:

1. Send a blank connection request: Most people accept blank requests so don't waste time personalizing yours. That can trigger “sales alarms” and often decrease the chances of an acceptance.
2. Send a context-only first message: Make the InMail only about them and leave the pitch for the 1st email they just received. (PS: Send a DM if they accepted to avoid burning an InMail credit.)
3. Send a bubble-up: Look familiar? Yep, it's just like the 2nd email.
4. (Optional) Send a video: Look familiar? Yep, it's just like the 3rd email. Make it real.

These touches are usually enough to boost the email replies without spending too much time on manual LinkedIn touches.

Get the ultimate step-by-step program to master the phones

That's a Wrap! More Outbound Resources

You're well on your way to booking your next meetings folks. If you liked what you saw here, the natural progression after learning the sequence structure is to master each of the channels.

Check out the resources below to take your sequences to the next level:

Cold Calling	Cold Email + LinkedIn
• 18 Objections and Scripts For Each • 2 Cold Call Openers And 4 Full Pitch Examples • Free Preview of Cold Calling Sucks (And That's Why It Works)	• How to Write A Good Sales Email • How To Personalize Cold Emails At Scale • How to Book Meetings on LinkedIn by Charly Johnson

1. Book: Cold Calling Sucks \(And That's Why It Works\): Join 35,000+ readers of the #1 cold calling book with step-by-step talk tracks, real voiceovers embedded in QR codes, and Gong data behind every tactic.
2. Cold Calling Course: Cold Calls to President's Club: The secret to booking 1 in 4 cold calls is mastering the delivery. Take the book a step further with new frameworks, examples, and real call reviews so you know exactly what to say and how to say it.

Get the ultimate step-by-step program to master the phones

30 MINUTES TO
PRESIDENT'S CLUB